When recognition for a job well-done finally arrives, and the person holding the microphone asks how you did it, how will you respond? When yours is the name in the envelope, and the award is made public, how will you accept? When your client breaks from tradition and commends your performance, what will you say? This is not a small issue! There is a man of history who missed this question on the “final,” and it cost him everything. If you suspect you may one day experience your ten minutes in the spotlight, take time now to get your acceptance speech written!
